

The visualization is a 10x10 grid where each cell's color represents the density of data points. The color scale ranges from dark purple (low density) to yellow (high density). The highest density is observed in the top-left corner, specifically in the first few columns and rows, and decreases as it moves towards the bottom-right corner.

